The result was, that the sharpest differences sprang out of measures which, however right or wrong, ceased with the extgencies that gave them birth, and left no permanent effect either on the constitution or on the general prosperity of the country. ences, to rebel at times against the will of the majority, and to encroach upon the power which they have them-selves constituted. Such, however, is the organization selves constituted. Such, however, is the organization of our government that this disposition has always been met by healthy legislation, and always resulted in restoring to its proper balance the disturbed condition of public affairs. This party spirit has always existed in our midst. It always will exist and, in the language of Washington, "a fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume." This difference in public sentiment was not less marked immediately after the Revolution than at the present mement. Even the constitution in its original state was by no means found perfect, and upon the question of its adop-tion two great parties came into the field, who formed respectively the basis of these which have since divided the people of the United States—its friends being called fede-ralists, and its opponents anti-federalists. It was a com-promise of conflicting interests, and some positions of it were regarded as exceptionable by each of the States. This resulted from the fact that it united thirteen independent republics into a consolidated government having a control of the whole—republics which differed having a control of the whole—repondes which discrete widely in situation, extent, habits and demostic institutions. Rights and privileges were on all sides surrendered without apparent equivalents. Patrick Henry opposed its adoption with his usual velamence, and even Franklin said in the convention: "I common to this constitution because I expect no better, and because I am not sure it is not the best. The opinion I have had of its ENTH STREET, NEAR errors I macrifice to the public good," Even. Washington said: "There are some things in the new form, I will readily acknowledge, which never did, and never will obtain my cordial approbation; but I did then conceive and do now most drinly believe that in the aggregate it is the beas constitution that can be obtained at this crock, and that this or a dissolution awaits our choice and in the culy alternative."

Again: "It appears to me little short of a miracle that EN DOWN ON THE IST the delegates from so many States, different from each other in their manners, dirgumstances and prejudices, should unite in forming a system of national government so little liable to well founded objections. Nor am I yet such an enthusiastic, partial or indiscriminating admirer of it as not to perceive it is tinctured with some real, though not radical, defects."

Our national existence is now in its eighty-arts year. In that time the world has winessed the wonderful spectacle of so less than tweive, or afteen rebellions that have for the time being canor afteen rebellions that have for the time being 'Asturbed the country from border to border, and yet 'Axve passed away like a summor's cloud with the events which gave them birth. Where is the monarchir all country that presents anything like the rame fact. An outbreak every eight years—a moral sevolution, that has terminated without bloodshed, and without the weakening the social or political fabric.

It must be beene in mind, however, 'Ast these excitaments have arisen from circumstances of a purely local character, and they have been regulated and suppressed by the very reaction which they have been regulated.
